Geoglyph Cosmograms in Native American Mythology of the Northern Plains—David Benn

Geoglyphs at three Middle-Late Woodland and Oneota sites (13WD130, 23WD134, 39LN108) in northwestern Iowa and adjacent South Dakota take the form of anthropomorphs, turtles, bison, and thunderers that are similar to petroglyphs at Pipestone Monument in southern Minnesota. Evidence indicates the geoglyphs were cosmograms where vision quests and other life-renewal rituals were conducted. The cosmograms and ritual evidence are compared to ethnographic descriptions of Lakota tribal myths to reveal possible symbolism. The sites are hypothesized to have once been part of "sacred" localities where multiple ritual sites fitted a structured mythological landscape. In this narrative, archaeological investigation penetrates two levels of inquiry: the sacred geography of place and legendary archetypes of mythology.

-Sunday Field Trip-

Join us for a tour of the History Museum on the Square. Journey through eight interactive galleries to see how Springfield, Missouri and its region shaped American history. Each gallery brings unique stories to life through world-class exhibits. A rich and vast collection of artifacts, photographs, and "voices of history" are combined. Exhibits include "Native Crossroads at the Spring," "Pioneers and Founders at the Crossroads," "Wild Bill Hickock and the American West," plus more.
